

The CNote Disaster Recovery and Resilience Program mobilizes capital for rapid deployment in disaster stricken areas through mission-driven financial institutions like Community Development Financial Institutions (CDFIs), Minority Depository Institutions (MDIs), and Low-Income Designated Credit Unions (LIDs). The program supports underserved communities with FDIC and NCUA insured deposits placed with community financial organizations that provide emergency financial products that support recovery and financing that build long-term resilience after natural disasters.

Why is the Disaster Recovery & Resilience Program needed?

When disasters strike, under-resourced communities are hit hardest. Lacking financial support and experiencing high climate-related community barriers, they struggle to rebuild, deepening inequality. The Disaster Recovery and Resilience Program addresses this urgent need by supporting local mission-driven financial institutions that provide valuable resources to vulnerable communities so they can recover and build resilience for the future.
